Testimony and Journey

I grew up in a free thinking environment where Christianity was not the center of our home. As a young man I made many foolish decisions that led me down a dark path. When I was nineteen years old someone invited me to a Bible study and a conference in Atlanta where I heard the gospel clearly preached for the first time. That moment changed my life. The message of Christ and His grace awakened something in me and I began pursuing God and searching for ways to grow in my faith.

A few years later I joined a men's Bible study. One of the men in that group told us about a man named Soup Campbell who was training men to live on missions and make disciples. I was drawn to it immediately. I did not grow up with my father in my life, so I longed for strong male leadership. I also had a deep desire to serve in missions and see the world beyond my neighborhood.

Later that evening we met with Soup Campbell. He began sharing stories about reaching people in hard places, about the 10/40 window, and about stepping into uncomfortable environments to share the gospel. His passion and conviction stirred something in me. I knew I wanted to learn from him.

Not long after that meeting I packed my bags and moved to Memphis, Tennessee to be trained and discipled by him. The neighborhood was difficult, but it was exactly where I wanted to be. I wanted to live among people who had grown up marginalized and overlooked in many of the same ways that I had.

That decision changed my life.

More than twenty years later the impact of that discipleship relationship is still shaping me. Because of what I learned through that process I have been able to travel throughout the world sharing the gospel and teaching the process of disciple making.

God has allowed me to serve in eight countries across Africa, in China, throughout Central America, across the United Kingdom and Europe, in Canada, and in the Middle East including Qatar, Egypt, and Dubai. I have also traveled to prisons, churches, and communities across the United States training people in the scriptures and helping them understand how to live lives of transformation and mission.

What began with one man investing in my life continues to multiply. Soup Campbell showed me what it looks like to follow Jesus with courage and obedience. Because of that investment I now have the privilege of walking with others, helping them grow in their faith, and encouraging them to do the same for someone else.

One man poured into me. Now I pour into others. And the story continues.

Grace and peace,
